Fail to Bow to Superbas on Day of Great Rejoicing in Brooklyn.

POCKET GAME: STARY WEST

Big Crowd Disappointed When McGraw Omits to Send Marquard Out to Meet Rucker.

The Giants started West last night after pocketing another victory over the Brooklyn Superbas in a thrilling struggle Washington Park yesterday afternoon while twenty thousand spectors, and per haps more, bore witness. Two errors-ona glaring bungle by Bert Tooley, which put Beals Becker on first base in the eighth inning, and the second an excusable muff of Merkle's fly by Northen, which allowed Fred Merkle to get to secondwere followed by a mighty line drive to centre field for a single by "Big Chief" Meyers, and the Giants took the lead. never to relinquish it. One more run in the ninth inning gave New York the victory by a score of 5 to 3. This was the fly in the cintment, the only jarring note in the ceremonious programme of laying the cornerstone of the new Brooklyn base-

Anticipating a second meeting of "Rube Marquard and "Nap" Rucker, the crowd came early and in great numbers. It was not long before every seat and every available inch of standing space in the uncovered bleachers was occupied. Then the "fans" stormed the grandstand. At 2:45 o'clock the sale of tickets was ordered stopped, but since a crowd of fully five thousand "fans" demanded admission Ebbets then decided to let the people in roping off spaces in left and right fields, which were filled as soon as they were thrown open.

Dahlen courted the duel by warming up Rucker, but McGraw decided to rest Marquard for the meeting with the Cubs on fonday and sent Ames out to do battle with the great southpaw of the Superbas. This was not to the liking of the crowd, which roared and yelled for Marquard, but Dahlen then decided to save Rucker for the Reds, and "Roaring" Pat Ragon was substituted after the second

With perfect support Ragon might well have won his game. The Giants secured eight hits from his delivery, but the Brooklyn pitcher kept them well scattered. The Giants simply refused to be downed, however, and when the opportunity finally presented itself, they were keen to seize it.

Leon Ames started the game for New York, but he was hit at critical times, and when he retired in the seventh inning to-allow Devore to bat for him, the score stood 3 to 2 in favor of Brooklyn. Otis Crandall was then sent into the box, and, pitching in his best form, he held the Superbas at was finally achieved. Only once was Crandall in danger, and then one of the most daring bits of baserunning seen in many a day at Washington Park was thwarted by a surpassing piece of fielding. In the eighth inning, with the score 4 to 3 in favor of New York, Daubert hit to second base, but was forced by Zack Wheat. The latter stole second with surprising ease, his second larceny committed on "Chief" Meyers. Hummel found e ball to his liking, and, hitting it with all his power, sent it whistling to deep centre field. Beals Becker was under it when it dropped, however, and picked it off the centre field fence. Like an unleashed greywas well past third when Becker's relay was caught by Fletcher, and had hit the dirt in a desperate slide for the run that would have tied the score. Fast ran Wheat, but faster flew the ball from Fletcher, and just as Zack was about to score Meyers blocked him off and nipped him by an inch. It was one of the greatest sights seen on any diamond this year, and both runner and fielders were wildly cheered.

Nor was that one great play the only sensation, although it dulled all others by comparison. The men were up on their toes at all times, and despite the seven errors which were sprinkled through the CRAVATH BATS TO VICTORY game, did well. Little Hank Groh, who played second base for the Giants in the absence of Larry Doyle, cavorted around the midway and fairly ate up five out of six chances that came his way. His one bobble was on a savage lick that might well have gone as a hit.

J. Carlyle Smith, known to the Brooklyn "fans" as "Red." and plain John Murray, known to New York "fans" as "Red," had a red-hot battle for honors with the hickory. Brooklyn "fans" declare that Smith had somewhat the better of the struggle, and insist that his home run with a runner on first and a brace of singles did more damage than Murray's triple with Merkle on base, and his double when the bases were empty, although Murray counted later on a sizzning drive to right by "Buck" Herzog. "Chief" Meyers was also in the running with the two hits, one in the eighth, which won the game

Brooklyn advanced the first scoring proposition in the second inning. With one out Hummel beat out a bunt, and Tooley singled to centre. Miller then forced Bert at second, while Hummel took the far turn. Dahlen then decided to take Rucker out of the game. Daly went in to bat for Moo. the big southpaw and proved himself to be the man of the moment when he singled to centre and scored Hummel with the first run. Jake Daubert then moved up about three feet off first, but that move was fatal. Murray placed the ball through the very spot vacated by Daubert, and the hit, a slow roller, counted as a triple. Going down to defeat before the Washing on Senators once more, the crippled and disheartened Yankees sank into last place with almost a homesick sigh as they struck their colors to Ciarke Griffith's men at score of S to 7. The Vankees how ever, did not reach their goal without in the fifst place, the Senators did their best to throw the game away making a few horrible errors, and the St Louis Browns, after whipping the Naps ' the first game of a double header, refused to win the second. After much free-for-all scoring, in which grewsome errors figured as prominently as hard hitting, the teams came down to the ninth inning with the scored tied at 6 all. Then the Yankees proceeded to show their utter disregard for consequences. Guy Zint played the leading part in the affair, and, thanks to his fine little error, two runs pattered over the rubber, and the game was Hughes was passed for a starter and took second on an infield out by, Moeller. Hartwell, the Yale Pitcher, in Leading College Baseball Teams Lose Players Who Will Be Hard to Replace.

It would be asking too much of the Giants to ride roughshod over practically all opposition on the Western trip this time, as they John J. McGraw, whose appetite for win fore leaving last night for Chicago, where Field Club kept its lead in the Amateur Face should not be maintained. the opposition will be stronger.

With the Giants on the road, the Yankees will do their best to entertain the 'fans' on the Hilltop. Unfortunately for Frank Farrell, the team has been going so badly that lovers of baseball will seek other forms of amusement rather than journey up through the heated subway and congested outlet to American League Park. No game will be played to-morrow as it happens to be one of the few off days of the season, but the Detroit Tigers will arrive here on Tuesday, while the lowly St. Louis Browns will put in an appearance on Friday to fight it out with Wolverton's men for last place in the league standing. Under the circumstances, seats are not likely to be at a premium on the Hilltop this week.

Earl Gardner, who has at times played brilliant ball around second base for the New York Yankees, was sold yesterday to the Cleveland Naps. It was an outright sale, the sum of money involved not being announced by the club.

Russell Ford, the star twirler of the Yankees, and Miss Mary H. Bethell, of Reidsville, N. C., were married in Washington on Friday night. Ford celebrated the occasion by pitching on the hilltop yesterday. Unfortunately, he lost.

The Boston Red Sox wound up a critical series with the world's champions in Philadelphia yesterday and started home with four of the six games played tucked away in the winning column. It was a test that counted, and Jake Stahl and his men will now continue the race for the American League pennant with more confidence than ever. The Phillies have signed a new pitcher, named King, from Sacred Heart College, of Denver. King has a record of striking out twenty men in one game, and his average strike-out record last season is said to have been fourteen to a game.

Joe Tarbell, who pitched for the University of Vermont this year, has signed a contract with the Cleveland Naps.

Cast-offs from the Yankees now with Washington did their best to smite their former team mates last week. Jim Vaughn pitched the Senators into a victory over New York, while Roach helped to their undoing in another game with a

It will be hard, indeed, to replace these four men. The Brown team will face a problem almost as hard, as Captain Nash, a brilliant infielder, and both Conzelman and Warner, the effective pitchers, who rank with the best, were graduated last month. All three were considered good enough to get a trial with major league clubs, which indicates how they will be missed at Providence next spring.

Of the eight men who played regularly with the Princeton nine, not including the pitchers, this year, four were lost by graduation, and they included such stars as Sam White, the dashing shortstop, who had the to third. There is a rumor, too, that Lear, by far the best and most dependable pitcher on the squad, will be ineligible next season. Under the circumstances the three leading teams this year will begin another season on about the same footing in their effort to hold their forward places in the college baseball world.
